About the Cyprus Peace Polls

Dr Colin Irwin is a Senior Research Fellow in the Department of Politics at the University of Liverpool. He conducted all the public opinion polls in support of the Northern Ireland peace process and on the completion of their Good Friday Agreement was first invited to Cyprus by the Greek Turkish Forum in 1998. He has visited Cyprus from time to time since then and has now completed two surveys about the current Cyprus negotiations which were conducted by Noverna in the Greek Cypriot community and Lipa in the Turkish Cypriot community. His work is funded by Interpeace. Some of the central findings of Dr. Irwin’s polls are published here with the full reports available on his website at <http://www.peacepolls.org>

The importance of Confidence Building Measure

On 11 February 2014 the leaders of the Greek and Turkish Cypriot communities and UN agreed a Joint Declaration that set out the parameters for reaching a settlement of the Cyprus problem. It included requirements for the implementation of Confidence Building Measures (CBMs).<sup>1</sup> Although a start has been made on CBMs more could be done. The top priority for the two sides and UN remains the reaching of an agreement on the future of Cyprus that is acceptable to both communities. However, that agreement must also pass a referendum and in this context CBMs may have an important role to play. So firstly then how important do the GC and TC communities consider the role of CBMs? Table 1 gives the results and there is little or no significant difference between the TC and GC opinion on this point. They are sceptical about the ability of the two sides to implement CBMs, but they do want CBMs and do believe they could help negotiations.

Table 1. The importance of CBMs

Do you expect the two sides to implement many of these CBMs? Yes/No

<sup>1</sup> Clause 7 of the Joint Declaration - The sides will seek to create a positive atmosphere to ensure the talks succeed. They commit to avoiding blame games or other negative public comments on the negotiations. They also commit to efforts to implement confidence building measures that will provide a dynamic impetus to the prospect for a united Cyprus.’

What CBMs and When?

Critically if CBMs are to help the negotiations and peace process in general they need to have maximum positive effect at minimum political cost at just the right time – during negotiations, after an agreement is reached but before a referendum or after a referendum as part of a new plan of government. Deciding which CBMs to implement when is a political decision for the two sides but here, from a list of 37 CBMs tested are the ‘top ten’ for the GC and TC communities in Table 2a and 2b.

Significantly symbolic CBMs that touch on questions of national identity, culture and religion are as important or sometimes more important than more practical CBMs associated with commerce and economic development. This is particularly true for the Greek Cypriot community. Full results for all the CBMs and their rank order are given in Appendix 1.

Peace Agreements and ‘Packages’

Table 3a and 3b list four CBMs that were also tested as a ‘package’. In Northern Ireland and Israel and Palestine agreement ‘packages’ always got or get a better result than the individual items in those ‘packages’ as the costs of one item is balanced out by the benefits of another. Essentially - ‘the whole is greater than the sum of its parts’.

This effect does show up here for Cyprus but that effect is not as nearly as strong as it was or is in Northern Ireland, Israel and Palestine perhaps because in Cyprus the status quo is acceptable to a significant section of the population while in Northern Ireland, Israel and Palestine the status quo of continued violent conflict was not or is not acceptable to a very significant majority. Clearly in Cyprus the benefits of an agreement will need to be emphasised and in this context CBMs may have an important role to play. Peace is not enough.

Support for an Agreement

The GC vote for an agreement went down a little in February due to a negative press following the failed negotiations in Switzerland and then the break down of negotiations also indicated a slight shift to 'no' from 'undecided'. Our most recent poll in March does not indicate any recovery in the 'yes' vote or further shift to 'no'.

When compared to the SEED result (collected at the same time as our first poll in December) the proportion of 'undecided' is much higher in our sample due to a different question being asked. To clearly identify the undecided voters we only asked if the informant would vote 'Yes' or 'No' or were they 'Undecided'. However SEED asked if they were 'Yes' or 'Leaning to Yes' or 'No' or 'Leaning to No' or 'Undecided' (Table 4a).

Table 4a. If we assume a scenario where the 2 leaders agree on a solution and a referendum is held, how would you be likely to vote, would you vote YES or would you vote NO?

Yes	15+23	28	25	28	26
No	32+12	26	29	30	29
Not decided/ it depends/DK/NA	18	46	45	42	45

On the GC side these changes in support for an agreement are also mirrored in another question that creates an index as follows: "Based on what you know from the negotiations so far, please tell me to what degree you agree with the solution being discussed on a scale of 1 to 10 where 10 means agree completely and 1 means disagree completely?"

This produced an average score for all the GC community in December 2016 of 5.6, and then February 2017 at 4.6 and finally March 2017 at 4.4.

<sup>3</sup> SEED 'Yes' as 'Yes' + 'leaning to Yes' and 'No' as 'No' + 'leaning to No'

The TC results are more consistent with the SEED results perhaps because the proportion of TC undecided in the North is lower. Additionally on the TC side a filter was used for those who said they would vote (about 70%) so that those who said they would not vote could be removed from the sample. When this was done another poll (not reported here) indicated that the support for an agreement fell significantly directly after the failed negotiations in Switzerland but that vote recovered later in February prior to the break down of negotiations (Table 4b). Our most recent poll seems to suggest that the TC 'undecided' voters are moving to either 'yes' and 'no' but in equal proportions.

Table 4b. If we assume a scenario where the 2 leaders agree on a solution and a referendum is held, how would you be likely to vote, would you vote YES or would you vote NO?

TC - All	Dec 16 SEED <sup>6</sup>	Dec 16 Percent Pre Switzerland <sup>7</sup>	Dec 16 Percent Pre Switzerland <sup>8</sup>	Feb 17 Percent Post Switzerland	March 17 Percent
Yes	23+21	40	44	46	49
No	17+16	36	34	37	39
Not decided/ it depends/DK/NA	24	24	22	17	12

Following our last poll the point was made that failed negotiations and/or a break down in negotiations seem to move undecided voters to 'no' and that new negotiations that are not likely to produce a result should not be 'hyped up' too much. Hopefully some carefully selected CBMs implemented at the right time can help to support a recovery in the 'yes' vote along with that most important of CBMs – an agreement acceptable to both communities.

Changes in support for an agreement based on contents of questionnaire

In addition to asking those being interviewed if they would be inclined to vote 'yes' for an agreement on the future of Cyprus or 'no', or were 'undecided' a follow up question was introduced to see if their views had changed after they had completed the questionnaire. This was done on the TC side with the same question to all persons interviewed in both polls 2 and 3 (Table 5a). Significantly Poll 2 dealt with the most difficult issues to be negotiated and indicated a shift away from 'yes' and 'no' to 'undecided'. However poll 3 that dealt with every day issues designed to build confidence in the peace process produced an opposite effect with potential voters moving from 'undecided' and 'no' to 'yes'.

Table 5b gives the results for the GCs for the same two polls. Here the methodology was a little different with only 'undecided' voters being asked if they had changed their opinions after working through the questionnaire. The results are a little better for the poll that focuses on CBMs in contrast to the poll that dealt with difficult issues in the negotiations but only marginally so and the results are still not as good as the results for the December poll run before the break down in negotiations (Table 5c).

In an effort to try and make some sense of these different dynamics Table 6 lists the ‘top ten’ negotiation issues from poll 2 and CBM issues from poll 3 together, in their rank order as ‘Essential’, for both the TC and GC communities. The GC and TC priorities are very different. But some of these top priorities can be easily done before the negotiation of an agreement on the future of Cyprus is completed. So if restoring confidence in the peace process is essential for the success of negotiations then the two sides and international community would do well to take what steps they can to implement what they can from these lists. (See Appendix 2 for a full list).
